COURSE INFORMATION

Target Audience

This activity has been designated for practitioners who care for people with skin disease, including dermatologists, dermatologic surgeons, and residents in dermatology.

Course Description

A nationally-recognized faculty will address important developments in medical, surgical, and cosmetic dermatology. A two-day symposium comprised of a series of didactic lectures strives for an unbiased and provocative perspective on many important topics relevant to both the dermatologist and dermatologic surgeon. Its targeted audience is dermatologists, dermatologic surgeons and residents in dermatology. This clinical program is immediately applicable to patient care, with a focus on broadening the armamentarium for the treatment of dermatologic diseases and aesthetic concerns that clinicians have at their disposal for dermatologic diseases and cosmetic therapy, evaluating newer and current therapies based on efficacy, convenience, and monitoring requirements.

Statement of Need

Competent dermatologic practice involves a strong emphasis on patient safety in the setting of treatment efficacy. The competent use of both topical and systemic therapies, for example, is completely dependent on considerations of risk and benefit and appropriate patient selection. The same can be stated for disease states relevant to surgical dermatology. Commonly in dermatology, current information on disease presentation, new therapies and data are not reaching the practicing dermatologists, and are not being incorporated into practice, and thus cases of more targeted therapies that work in a high percentage of patients are not being considered. In cosmetic dermatology, new areas of focus include the use of stimulatory fillers for volume replacement as well as implementation of laser assisted devices for lipolysis and body contouring as an alternative to full surgery liposuction. There is also a wide range of new technologies which are being rapidly introduced into the arena of facial rejuvenation.

Educational Objectives

- Based on a careful consideration of risk and benefit, as well as the published guidelines, demonstrate proper patient selection for medical, surgical and cosmetic intervention for dermatologic conditions
- Describe alternative nonsurgical methods of facial rejuvenation, including an expanding range of fillers, new chemodenervation agents, and fractional ablative technologies and formulate multimodality treatment plans based on known effectiveness of combination therapy
- Expand treatment options for non-surgical and minimally surgical fat contouring based on the implementation of laser assisted devices
- Base strategic approach to removal of cutaneous malignancy on epidemiologic, histopathologic, and current clinical research
- Describe strategies for incorporating adult therapies into pediatric patient treatment plans
- Critically evaluate available data on new treatments for psoriasis, including biologic and small molecule therapy, as well new findings for connective tissue disease

The Post-Graduate Medical School of the New York University School of Medicine is committed to improving patient care through continuing medical education.
