Course Description
This two-day course is intended to review the spectrum of common imaging problems, as well as uncommon but potentially dangerous pitfalls in the setting of trauma and emergency practice. The course will be case-and problem-oriented. Unlike many programs, it will rely strongly on active participation of attendees through small group interactive sessions. Didactic lectures will be presented each morning emphasizing approach and basics, however the majority of the day will be spent in case-conference workshops designed to maximize discussion of important diagnoses and clinical problems. Broad subject areas will include abdominal, neurologic, and cardiovascular emergencies, as well as CNS, chest, abdominal and extremity trauma. CT imaging, including multislice and dynamic techniques will be emphasized.

Educational Objectives
After completing this course, attendees should be able to:

- Formulate an appropriate imaging strategy for patients with common emergent presentations and acute traumatic injury.
- Diagnose the common conditions that are seen in the emergency population as well as the uncommon, often overlooked problems.
- Recognize both primary and associated injuries in patients with various traumatic mechanisms.
