Built on 163 acres, leaving untouched as much of the island's flora as possible, the course is designed to take advantage of its natural terrain. The back nine holes meander across high country at an altitude of 2,000 feet. The "signature hole," Number 17, plays from a 250-foot elevated tee to a fairway bordered by a lake along its right side, and trees and dense shrubs along its left. The front nine moves dramatically through ravines wooded with pine, koa and eucalyptus trees.
