The mission of the New York University Center for the Study of Asian American Health (CSAAH) is to reduce health disparities in the Asian American community through research, training and partnership. As a core area of the Center for the Study of Asian American Health, the HDRTP provides training, outreach, and research opportunities for students and health professionals to gain knowledge and skills to address Asian American health disparities. Through hands-on experience on a community-based research project, HDRTP interns will develop a deeper understanding of culturally and linguistically appropriate approaches to research, outreach, community partnerships, and care delivery in Asian American populations.

The program offers a research training opportunity to qualified college, graduate, as well as post-graduate health professionals, and intends to:

- Increase competence and commitment among trainees to work in community-based participatory research on Asian American health disparities;
- Increase the number of potential investigators from Asian American and economically disadvantaged groups to conduct research in Asian American health disparities; and
- Increase the number of research projects addressing health disparities among Asian American populations.

Whether they are involved in the Center’s current projects or student-initiated projects, HDRTP interns will have the opportunity to develop skills such as partnership development, literature reviews, manuscript development, survey design, and data collection and analysis. They will also have opportunities to network with other health professionals and learn about the various opportunities that one can have in the health field.

How to Apply

The HDRTP is open to students and health professionals who are interested in gaining skills to conduct community-based participatory research with Asian American communities. Students and professionals in medicine, public health, social work, nursing and other health related fields are encouraged to apply. The program also considers physicians and other allied professionals at various levels of their careers who desire to explore opportunities in research. To be eligible for the training program, a prospective candidate must:

- Have previous experience working with Asian American communities;
- Be committed to addressing disparities in Asian American health;
- Have a willingness to work and learn from colleagues at varying levels of health expertise; and
- Have an interest and/or familiarity with qualitative and quantitative research methods

If interested in HDRTP, please send a cover letter, resume, and a completed HDRTP application (available at bit.ly/nyuhdrtp) to Rebecca Lee at rebecca.lee3@nyulangone.org. Please include “HDRTP – Fall 2019 Intern” in the email heading.