What can the clinic do for you?

- Doctors trained in occupational medicine can perform a confidential diagnostic evaluation and provide appropriate medical and preventive treatment.
- They can, in many cases, determine whether exposure to workplace hazards has affected your health.
- They can work with your other doctors.
- They can help with rehabilitation, and they can help you and your employer arrange for a safe return to work.
- They can provide an assessment for disability benefits.

Our experts can help you stay healthy in the future by:

- Talking with you about identifying hazards at work and ways you and your employer can eliminate them.
- Visiting your jobsite to see if it meets safety standards.
- Helping you and your employer make the workplace safer.
- Fitting you for personal protective equipment, such as a respirator, and teaching you how and when to use it.
Do you feel sick and think your illness might be job-related?

Do you come in contact with dangerous materials on the job like asbestos, lead, or toxic fumes, solvents, gases or dusts?

Does your job involve making the same movements over and over again with your hands?

Do you have any of these symptoms?
- You have trouble breathing on the job
- You have hearing loss after being exposed to loud sounds at work
- Your wrists, hands or arms ache or feel numb, especially at night

Do your co-workers have health problems that are a lot like yours?

Have you been told you have asbestosis, carpal tunnel syndrome, asthma, tuberculosis, or lead poisoning?

If you answer yes to any of these questions, an occupational medicine evaluation might help you.

The Bellevue/NYU Occupational & Environmental Medicine Clinic has been in operation since 1991. Our team includes physicians specializing in occupational medicine, internal medicine and pulmonary medicine, as well as an industrial hygienist.
