Beginning with Freud’s 1912 recommendation that the analyst “should simply listen, and not bother about whether he is keeping anything in mind,” this course examines the development of the concept of “analytic listening” as it has been elaborated and influenced by theoretical and technical changes in clinical theory over the last century. Candidates will learn about listening to: fantasy, interpretation, and conflict, as well as the concepts of analytic surface, analytic space, and enactment. Clinical material from both the instructors’ and candidates’ practices will be used to clarify and exemplify various technical concepts, which emerge from the readings.
