Between 1920 and 1926, Freud revolutionized his own psychoanalytic theory. Although, his work from this period has often been referred to as the 'structural model,' the period can better be understood as a radical transformation of each aspect of psychoanalytic metapsychology: economic, dynamic and topographical. Freud entirely reworked his theories of the drives, psychic structure, as well as anxiety and defense. Each of the three texts (Beyond the Pleasure Principle, The Ego and the Id, and Inhibitions, Symptoms, and Anxiety) represents a significant and interrelated step in this radical re-theorizing of psychoanalysis. The objective of the course is for students to better understand Freud's complex, later theoretical transformations and to appreciate their formative impact on the various schools of psychoanalysis which came afterward.

READING LIST

All readings available on PEP-Online.

Week 1: (Review and Preview) Freud (1917) Introductory Lectures on Psychoanalysis pp. 295-top 299.

Week 2: Freud. (1920) Beyond the Pleasure Principle. Chapters 1-4

Week 3: Freud. (1920) Beyond the Pleasure Principle. Chapters 5-7

Week 4: Freud. (1923) The Ego and the Id. Preface, Chapters 1-2
Week 5: Freud. (1923) The Ego and the Id. Chapter 4 (Drives)

Week 6: Freud (1917) Mourning and Melancholia pp. 247 (middle) to 249 (middle)

Freud. (1923) The Ego and the Id. Chapters 3 and 5 (superego)

Weeks 7: Freud. (1926) Inhibitions, Symptoms, and Anxiety. Chapters 1-4

Weeks 8: Freud. (1926) Inhibitions, Symptoms, and Anxiety. Chapters 5-7

Weeks 9: Freud. (1926) Inhibitions, Symptoms, and Anxiety. Chapters 8-10

Week 10: Review and Catch-up.